

Born in 1989, lives and works in Taipei, Taiwan.

My art practice delves into the frustration derived from our inability to make meaningful changes in the fluctuating complexity of the modern world. Through a fusion of chaos and defiance, I depict the raw experience of navigating social norms and expectations through painterly language.

Inspired by personal experiences and imagination, my work portrays the hopelessness of being trapped in the mechanical construct built by societal pressures. This exploration reflects a broader examination of the human conditions within a society filled with contradictions. By confronting systematic restraints, my work reflects personal agency and societal structures, which express the nuance of powerless weight within a larger framework.
